SDG1: No Poverty

1.3.5: Does your university as a body have schemes to support poor students from low or lower-middle income countries (e.g. offering free education, grants)?

Yes, my university is committed to enhancing educational opportunities for students from low-income countries through several pioneering initiatives. It has established a program aimed at providing free scholarships for foreign students from these countries, which helps alleviate their financial burdens. This program is implemented through a main portal affiliated with the Iraqi Ministry of Higher Education and Scientific Research, called "Study in Iraq." More details can be found through

Additionally, my university has launched a special program to accept students from low-income countries, such as Lebanon. This program includes academic and social support to ensure the success of students in their studies. Furthermore, the university seeks to provide employment opportunities for students coming from these countries, helping them build sustainable professional futures and enhancing their educational experiences. For more information about this program, please visit this link. This approach reflects the university's commitment to social responsibility and its dedication to supporting all students, regardless of their economic backgrounds.
