Times Higher Education
Sustainability
Impact Ratings

3.3.4: Sexual and reproductive health care services for students

The Community Health Technologies Department Organizes an Awareness Campaign on Cervical Cancer and Its Prevention Methods.

The Community Health Technologies Department at Al-Mustaqbal University organized an awareness campaign entitled "Cervical Cancer and Its Prevention" on March 30, within the university campus.

The campaign aimed to raise awareness about cervical cancer, its risk factors, symptoms, causes, and prevention methods, while highlighting the importance of sexual and reproductive health education. It also addressed the role of health awareness in protecting women's health and encouraging early detection through regular screening and HPV vaccination.

The event witnessed active participation from students, who contributed to discussions by asking questions and sharing ideas, enriching the educational dialogue and improving their understanding of cervical cancer prevention and reproductive health protection.

Furthermore, the campaign emphasized the importance of accessible health education, preventive screening, vaccination, and early diagnosis in reducing the risks associated with cervical cancer and improving women's health outcomes.

Link: https://uomus.edu.iq/Department/Details/110346

